

“The American Prayer” Single Review

Patrick Gibson released a new single in the final months of 2020, called “The American Prayer”. The song and accompanying video is a tribute that demonstrates a sincere show of support to the nation’s many law enforcement officers. The release of this single follows a period of time in our country’s history, where there has been unrest, after a violent summer full of protests and conflict.

“The American Prayer” opens with a catchy guitar hook before Patrick’s golden voice starts to tell the story of the life of a law enforcement officer from their family’s vantage point (“She can’t sleep cause he ain’t home. She always has the coffee on. She never knows where he’s been. It’s on her mind every now and then.”) He goes on to tell the story of the dangerous routine that law enforcement officers face every day. The chorus of his song is in the form of a prayer for the well-being of every law enforcement officer and their family. (“Bless his life, his wife, and kids, the place that he calls home. God Bless the U.S., one nation under God”).

Music has a way of giving comfort and support to people who are looking for healing. “The American Prayer” comes at a time when there is division in our country regarding our law enforcement officers. Through his inspirational lyrics and memorable melody, Patrick has found a way to illustrate the point that these LEO’s have caring families that need and depend upon them, and how both they and their families need the support of the people of our fine nation. This song has all the ingredients to become an anthem that helps to encourage healing and understanding, especially as it continues to explode at radio. The message of “The American Prayer” comes from the pen of Patrick Gibson at a time when we need to hear it the most.
